Open Nepal Initiative In Place

Open Nepal Initiative (Open data and aid transparency) – a collective effort of a coalition of organizations including Freedom Forum, NGO Federation, Young Innovations and the aidinfo program at Development Initiative – was launched amid a function in the capital on June 6, 2013. The Open Nepal launch was an important event of Open Nepal Week beginning from June 2 that included media roundtable discussion, data literacy workshop, and hackaton. On the occasion, a portal www.opennepal.net was launched.

It is a platform to promote the availability of better data and provide tools, skills and support to help those in the development ecosystem to access, analyze and use data for more inclusive and effective development.

Giving welcome remarks at the launch, Chairperson of the Freedom Forum, Taranath Dahal, said that the initiative for the open Nepal and open data was taken with the motto that every citizen should be provided data/information in an understandable form and format. Only availability of information/data was not adequate to ensure people’s accessibility to information, he said.

On the occasion, keynote speaker, principal advisor to the Finance Ministry, Dr Chiranjivi Nepal, said that openness was the only tool that could increase the wealth of nations. Openness could uplift countries and uplift the people. “Aid transparency is not sufficient at present in Nepal”, he said, adding the challenge to Nepal is to improve transparency.

On the occasion, Victoria Room, a policy advisor from Development Initiatives, said the Open Nepal was not to replace the existing information systems and processes. Instead it sets out to build on those existing systems and processes, and provide a hub to support different actors to access, analyze and use the data to maximum value.

Executive Director at the FF, Krishna Sapkota, said the FF in the Open Nepal Initiative aimed to strengthen capacity of economic-beat journalists and parliamentarian secretariat employees to make them able to use, analyze and impart aid information as intermediaries, reach out to citizens for increasing their awareness level on ATA issues through budget/aid literacy program and to establish a baseline of data availability.

Chief Executive Officer at the Young Innovation, Bibhusan Bista, said the portal was aimed at making every data available. Open Nepal was more than a technical platform, he added.

Earlier, on June 5, a hackathon was organized with the participation of the people, especially the techies. It was the development of applications from data relating to the motto of open data and open Nepal. Various 19 pitches

| Freedom Forum is happy to share that it has been elected a Council Member of IFEX, the largest global network of institutions working for freedom of expression. Freedom Forum was elected for council through voting of IFEX members at the 17th General Meeting and Strategic Conference held in Phnom Penh, Cambodia from 17 to 20 June 2013. The newly elected council members for 2013-2015 are, Association of Caribbean Media Workers, Trinidad and Tobago; Canadian Journalists for Free Expression, Canada; Centre for Independent Journalism, Malaysia; Egyptian Organization for Human Rights, Egypt; Foro de Periodismo Argentino, Argentina; Freedom Forum, Nepal; Independent Journalism Center, Moldova; International Federation of Journalists, Belgium; International Press Institute, Austria; Media Foundation for West Africa, Ghana; Media Institute of Southern Africa, Namibia; and PEN International (Writers in Prison Committee), United Kingdom. The voting for the council members was held on June 17. In addition to election of the council members, various 12 organizations became IFEX members through this general meeting.

It is the regard of international community to the continued struggle of key stakeholders, including FF, Nepali journalists and media for improving and augmenting broader area of freedom of expression situation in Nepal. FF is grateful to all freedom of expression workers in Nepal and all IFEX members and supporters for this opportunity. FF Chairperson Taranath Dahal participated in the meeting.

Indeed, the FF, since its establishment...

eedom of expression and opinion is a fundamental right, and the media is an effective and vibrant means to express views and thoughts on any matter or about any issue of public concern. With the passage of time, new media has emerged changing the entire landscape of the media and its roles. Internet has provided tremendous opportunities and platforms to everyone to express views, engage people on any topic, debate on it and seek solution and furnish recommendation to any authority. As the internet is a broad area, it has helped build new forms of platform for expression as with website, blog, news portal, and social media including facebook, twitter, and linkedin. The changing facet of media has obviously affected Nepali media and journalists. But in the recent days, the police persons have been taking stock on journalists operating news portals and questioning the content though police are not the authorities to scrutinize the media content.

However, it is important that journalists have no special rights to exercise freedom of expression more than to the common people. So, they also need to heed the legal duty. In this connection, Section 47 of the Electronic Transaction Act 2008, according to which, the police harassed some journalists, has mentioned that anyone publishing ‘illegal materials’ in electronic form would be punished. The illegal materials as the Section describes are dissemination through internet/email which is contrary to the public morality or decent behavior or anything that spreads hatred or jealousy against anyone or jeopardizes the harmonious relations among people of various caste, tribes and communities.

Of course, the breach of law is punishable. But the concern is- is it the police administration to see the media content? Where is the chance for journalists for self correction? How justifiable that journalists are arrested and suppressed for the news they write? The recent police action on the news portal operator and its news writer was evidently unjustifiable, as it discourages the new media opportunities and is responsible for growing self-censorship among journalists. This incident also points out an urgency to amend related laws. The amendment to the related laws should encourage the freedom of expression practitioners to be responsible for the people disseminating factual information. The Freedom of Expression and Right to Information are very important rights and once these are suppressed, various glaring issues as responsive governance, accountability, transparency, informed citizenry and inclusive participation would be clouded.

Finally, Nepal is now heading for election to the Constituent Assembly again. A free and fair election depends on many things. Among these, media is very significant. Once the media is free and fair, it helps ensure the free and fair CA election. Periodic election is vital to democracy where free media is equally unavoidable to nurture democratic values. When media launches healthy debates on election, voter education and awareness, it encourages people/voters for active participation and make the politicians accountable to the voters and the elections inclusive and meaningful. To make the media outlets more credible and make reporting more sensible, journalists in Nepal are in need to adopt a new perspective of data journalism. Drawing evidence with data/fact is an important part to make a healthy opinion and influence public authorities for selecting better policies and their execution for the greater good of people.

KC bags Courageous Journalism Award

reedom Forum and IPI Nepal Chapter jointly honored Govinda KC, reporter with the Nagarik daily from Dailekh, a hilly district in the far western region of Nepal, with the ‘Courageous Journalism Award’ for 2013.

Acting Chief Justice Damodar Prasad Sharma conferred the award on journalist KC amidst a programme organized by FF in collaboration with IPI Nepal Chapter in the capital city on May 2, 2013 on the occasion of the World Press Freedom Day (May 3).

Also the publisher and editor of a local Teshro Ankha vernacular daily, KC was honoured with the award in recognition of his contribution to fostering press freedom and curbing impunity despite facing life threats especially in reporting about the murder of journalist Dekendra Thapa.

KC untiringly and dauntlessly reported about the murder-accused of journalist Thapa in the local and the national newspaper from his district, which in a way created pressure on the authority to initiate action against the perpetrators.

But, he along with his 22 friends were forced to leave from their work station in Dailekh after receiving continuous death threats from the leaders and cadres of then ruling Unified Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist) and its breakaway faction Community Party of Nepal-Maoist over the news reporting on the arrest of the Dekendra’s murder.

On the occasion, Acting Chief Justice Sharma said free press was important not only for independent judiciary but also for the protection of human rights.

The Supreme Court is committed to making the court media friendly, he added.

Similarly, Member of the National Human Rights Commission Gauri Pradhan said Nepal witnessed disappointing time in terms of free press this year.

Senior journalist Harihar Birahi said free press is not only for journalists but also for the empowerment of people and their freedom of expression, he added.

Freedom Forum Chairman Taranath Dahal said the governments in the recent years have been indifferent to the free press. Also IPI Nepal Chapter Chairperson Padma Singh Karki said the program was organized to inspire journalists to exercise freedom of expression in a free and professional manner.

Award recipient KC said the award has encouraged him to continue his fight for citizen’s right and press freedom. He reminded the harrowing reality of fight for press freedom and curbing impunity despite facing life threats especially after the murder of journalist Dekendra Thapa in the district.

Marking the same day, Acting CJ Sharma released a book, Sarbochha Adalattata Shyeyko Suchana Tatha Sancharsambadhi Phaisalaharu (Supreme Court Decisions on Information and Communications) published by FF with financial assistance from IMS, Denmark.
May 3 Report 2013

Press Freedom at Receiving End of Political Instability

Compared to the last year, this year (1 May 2012- April 30, 2013) witnessed an upsurge in press freedom violations and incidents against freedom of expression. Freedom Forum has recorded a total of 131 press freedom violations during this monitoring period. Nearly 300 journalists were affected with the incidents.

As was in the past, journalists and media outlets were at the receiving end vis-a-vis political turmoil. Significant this time was - tumultuous beginning (May 2012) and the same in the beginning of New Year (January 2013) in Nepali media. Broadly speaking, these two times - the eve of the dissolution of the Constituent Assembly (May 27, 2012) and the arrest of the murder-accused of journalist Dekendra Thapa (January 2013) were dominant in media landscape.

The ruling Unified Communist Party of Nepal (Maoist) took centre stage by suppressing citizen’s right to information and freedom of expression thereby befouling free and fair atmosphere for the journalists to make news.

In different places, with the misuse of political power, media persons were badly assaulted by the Maoist party cadres leaving them seriously injured.

Whether with a lure by providing assistance to media persons and media outlets and associations loyal to the ruling parties, or trying to revive media policy or with strong objection to media reports, the government led by the UCPN-Maoist made utmost efforts to control media.

Besides political parties, security person, government officials, businessmen, ethnic community and leaders, cine artist, unknown gang were others intimidating to Nepali media with frequent attack, threat, death threats, manhandle, vandalism, newspaper burning.

In addition to this, government led by the Maoist party frequently made attempts to suppress the freedom of expression sometime by appointing party favourites and sometime appointing ineligible person in different information and media related bodies.

No new policies in favour of press freedom were introduced this year. As about the new trends this year in Nepali media, the emergence of associations and groups advocating merely for some indigenous people or particular ethnic community was really threatening to media freedom. It was witnessed on the eve of dissolution of the CA. Next, even the cine artists have emerged intimidating to media. Cinema, despite being one of the medium of free expression, created relations to journalism/press freedom as imprisonment, creating hostility to another medium of expression. Mass displacement of journalists was another new trend.

Despite this, some developments on impunity in relation to journalism/press freedom as imprisonment to murderers of journalist Dekendra Thapa after long can be taken as positive indicators.

All in all, bigger political crisis put the media freedom to corner. The rising number of press freedom violation (there were only 96 incidents of press freedom violation during the same monitoring period last year) is the candied evidence of this.

Analyzing these incidents and events over this monitoring period, it is fair to say the situation of press freedom was dissatisfying. So, time has come to make efforts for the protection and promotion of press freedom in order to ensure democratic values and culture in the country.

Editor Expelled without Prior Notice

Pradeep Kaphle, news editor and program presenter at the Damauli FM of Tanahu, western hilly region of Nepal, was sacked without prior notice and his program banned in the radio on June 4, 2013.

Mr Kaphle said, “I was banned from entering the FM Office by the management on June 4, and my programs were also cancelled and banned from airing a day earlier. I was informed over phone but not with formal or written information.”

The decision to sack him, he argued, came suddenly after the management meeting of June 2 attended by its patron Govind Raj Joshi. This is the second time he was harassed and humiliated by the FM station. He was demoted to news reader and reporter from the News Chief on January 21, 2013 merely because he aired the views of a leader live from a program. The leader giving speech, as he said, was objected by the patron of FM, Govind Raj Joshi.

He was made a victim of the rivalry of political leaders in the district. Mr Kaphle further informed that he was the regular staff (News Chief, editor, reporter) since the establishment of the FM five years back. He has share in the FM too.

“I, despite being victimized by the management need respected exit- as I need an appointment letter which I’ve not been provided till date. Then I myself will tender resignation and leave the hostile work atmosphere.”

The story shows deplorable situation of a working journalist in Nepal. The FM management never abided by the Working Journalists’ Act but suppressed journalists’ rights, and misused them for partisan interest.

Political Leaders Threaten Jurno of Physical Action

On June 26, 2013, Suman Malla, reporter with the Nayapatrika daily from Mugu, was threatened of physical action over the news story he wrote about the political parties’ sharing of budget in a Village Development Committee (VDC). Mugu is an upper hilly district in the distant and difficult mid-western region of Nepal.

Reporter Malla was invited by Chief District Officer Hira Lal Chaudhari at his office where the district leaders of the Nepali Congress and the CPN-UML parties grilled why he wrote the news. They threatened him of breaking hands and legs if he continued writing such.
Scribe’s arrest sparks new debate on Online Journalism

First of its kind in Nepal, journalists affiliated to the news portals were held reasoning a news story and dubbing the story falling under the cybercrime. The incident created furor in Nepali media freedom. It also opened up avenues for broad discussion and debates among stakeholders, including media policy makers, government and its agencies and free expression practitioners, about the internet freedom, international standard of free expression, current policy and media laws, code of conduct to the online news portals, cybercrime, use and misuse of social media, role of the Press Council Nepal, demand of the amendment of Electronic Transaction Act. FF maintained its stand that arrest of journalists merely because of news was against freedom of expression practice and against law.

FF believes that no citizen should be treated as a criminal while exercising any medium of freedom of expression.

On June 20, 2013, police arrested guest editor to a news portal- www.nepalheadlines.com, Sushil Pant, and its owner Santosh Bhattarai, reasoning a news story about a girls’ college the online published nearly a month back.

Police held them saying, ‘there was something to inquire about a news story’. But it was known on June 23 that one more journalist was held 10 days before the pair were held from the capital city.

According to the District Police, Kathmandu, Pushkar Nath Kandel, operating a news portal- www.extrakhabar.net in Palpa, a hilly district in the western region of Nepal was arrested over the same news story he copied from the www.nepalheadlines.com.

After learning the arrest, Freedom Forum continuously monitored the situation considering the right to freedom of expression. During the monitoring, FF met the detained journalists, inquired about their condition, asked the concerned police officials about the arrest, asked district attorney about the case and maintained its stand for the journalists’ right.

Asked why the journalists were arrested, the District Police, Kathmandu, said, “After Campus Chief of the Kanya Multiple Campus, Dillibazaar, of the capital city lodged a complaint that the news carried in the nepalheadlines.com would badly tarnish the image of the campus and character of the girl students, we arrested the journalists.”

But, FF was against the sudden arrest of journalists merely because of news writing. And, it was not the police person to handle the content issues if anything was wrong. Highhandedness of the police was evident to arrest journalists because there is already a separate agency, Press Council Nepal, a regulatory body to monitor the media content.

Arresting journalists on criminal case merely over news writing is against the international practice of freedom of expression. It is not the police but the Press Council Nepal to monitor whether the news content destabilizes social harmony.

Therefore, FF continuously demanded the immediate release of journalists.

The journalists were released later on 24 June, 2013. Here is what editor Pant said in the interview.

Why did police arrest you?
The police arrested us over a news story published in the Nepalheadlines news portal. Initially, we were called to the Hanumandhoka Police Office, saying the police want to know something about copy right issue. When we reached there we knew we were getting arrested over the news. I defended that no journalist could be held over the news, but the police detained us.

What actually was the news your online portal carried?
A news was about the Kanya Campus of Kathmandu which was published month back. It was said we were arrested over the same news story. This is much about it because Press Council Nepal is handling the news issue.

How do you find the online media in Nepal? What are its challenges in your views?
The online media is thriving in Nepal due to the advancement of information and technology. The culture of reading news in internet has attracted the journalists towards online media. Nepali online media have been very good source of information to the Nepalis living abroad. But state has not recognized. So, it is deterring. The state has not treated online journalism the way it does to the mainstream journalism. It is very difficult to have the online media registered, classified, and monitored. Even the online media is facing the problem that the information officers deny information to them.

Freedom of expression, which is beauty of democracy, is constitutionally guaranteed in Nepal. Do you find it respected? What is the difference between State’s policy and practice of such rights?
The constitution has guaranteed freedom of press and of expression in preamble but it is contrary in practice. How can we say freedom of expression is guaranteed in Nepal when the journalists are detained and borne with mental torture over the news? Journalists are arrested with false accusation. The government policy though sounds well, the officers who execute the policy are of old mindset regarding the freedom of expression. It reminds us of party-less Panchayat system.

Finally, as you are a free expression practitioner, what’s your suggestion (to media person, State, security) to improve free expression practice in Nepal?
In my view, most of the Nepalis have very narrowed understanding of the freedom of expression. Many think that freedom of expression is the right to write in newspaper. The online media, with the development of IT, has been a mainstream media. Many big newspapers have launched online edition. But, the freedom of expression thought has not got rid of 1991 time.

Undoubtedly, the media can’t brush aside the social responsibility, which, however, doesn’t mean that it can’t write the negative aspects of the changed society. The State never protects press freedom because the press is always its opposition. But, suppressing FoE in the democratic republic is a despotic thought. None can suppress any journalist merely for writing.

Political Leaders Threaten...
The incident was quite abhorrent that the political parties wallowed in misuse of budget and corruption threatened journalist in the presence of CDO, who instead of taking action on the political parties involved in the financial irregularities, encouraged them to grill the journalists, torch bearers to expose social and financial malpractices.

It is the latest case of the political parties threatening journalist to hide their embezzlement. Such incidents are responsible for growing self-censorship among journalists which is harmful to professional journalism.

Meanwhile, a political leader issued death threat to a journalist in Itahari, a city in the southern plain of eastern region in Nepal, on May 25, 2013.

Reporter with the Annapurna Post daily from Itahari, Somnath Bastola, was issued death threat by Hem Kama Poudel, a leader of Nepali Congress party in Sunsari district, over a news report on crime.

Reporter Bastola said that district leader of the Nepali Congress, Mr Poudel, threatened him of life reasoning he (Bastola) wrote false news about Surya Rai, another cadre of the party involved in crime. Poudel argued that Rai was clean.

He added that Rai was in police’s most wanted list which he made the story about.

It clearly shows how hostile the political leaders are against free reporting. Also, it is the protection of criminal by the political leaders which jeopardizes security to every people.
85 Activists Produced, 54 IOs Trained

Freedom Forum, working actively in the sector of democracy, right to information (RTI), and freedom of expression since its inception, has produced as many as 85 RTI strategic activists and trained 45 information officers (IOs) as part of its continuous mission for promoting the practical use of RTI in different spheres of development.

With the broader aim of augmenting democratic practice through the use of RTI by making the public agencies transparent and accountable to the people, and providing both supply and demand sides of information, the FF has continuously taken the RTI as the best tool to promote good governance.

Lately, under the strategic campaign on practical use of RTI launched for a year, 85 strategic activists have been produced with training by the FF. The activists come from different parts of the country, representing the municipalities and districts vulnerable to governance, and prone to corruption.

Following the training, the RTI strategic activists produced by the FF has spread RTI regime in Tarai, southern plain of country, and in the mid-western hill with the intensified campaigns.

In this connection, Dhanusha Chapter coordinator of the FF, Dhruba Jha (second lot trainee), and Ganesh Baniya (first lot trainee) has come up with really commendable jobs in the districts they are working as active strategic RTI activists.

According to the reports, Dhanusha district, having 64 public agencies (government offices) but the information officers at only four agencies have now increased to 32 public agencies due to effect/impact of information seeking campaign launched by FF's Dhanusha chapter for the last six months.

Most of the districts in the southern plain of Nepal are vulnerable in terms of governance. It is commonplace if there are news stories about corruption rife in the government offices in Tarai.

Considering this, FF had established its branch office at Dhanusha, a city in the southern plain of country, where chapter coordinator Dhruba Jha launched the information seeking campaign.

Chapter coordinator and RTI campaigner Dhruba Jha said, "It was very difficult to make public agencies aware about RTI Act. There were only four agencies having information officers in the beginning. Irregularities and corruption was rife. But, the information seeking campaign with the RTI use has changed the mindset of government officers. No public agency now rejects registration of information seeking application."

As Mr Jha said, the vibrant RTI campaign launched by the active youths in Dhanusha district has brought change. With the use of RTI law, not only citizen's right to information is promoted and respected but also the public agencies have tried to maintain transparency and accountability.

Similar story of improvement in government offices is from Jajarkot, a remote upper hilly district in the mid-western region of Nepal. It is not only geographically difficult but the people here are suffering from myriad of problems, as they are deprived of various government services. Smooth and prompt delivery of government service to the people here is a dream.

Amidst this situation, facing challenges, the strategic RTI activist produced by FF, Ganesh Baniya, has helped bring forth change in governance with the untiring information seeking campaign launched for the last 7 months.

46 youths trained on RTI focusing Municipal Governance

With the completion of three 5-day trainings on practical use of RTI focusing municipal governance on June 12, 2013, FF has produced a total of 46 RTI campaigners, aiming at improving the implementation status of RTI in the local level (municipality, village development committee, district) thereby augmenting the RTI regime across the country.

During the trainings, the participants were imparted both theoretical and practical knowledge and skills about the RTI. Identification of information, its importance, and information seeking procedure were some important parts of the training.

In the practical session of training, the trainers were sent to various public agencies (government offices) in the Kathmandu Valley to file information applications. Similarly, they were taken to the National Information Commission to garner knowledge how it was functioning in the RTI sector and how it could help the RTI campaigners across the country.
Govt. Suppresses Peaceful Campaign

On April 9, 2013, police arrested 12 human rights activists who were campaigning under the ‘Occupy Baluwatar’ campaign for over 100 days, demanding the end of violence against women and justice, establishment of rule of law, and against the impunity, from Baluwatar area, the place of the Prime Minister’s residence.

The arrested ones were Sudha Maharjan, Sushila Maharjan, Ishan Adhikari, Jagannath Lamichhane, Bidusha Dhungel, Prajwal Shrestha, Mukesh Shrestha, Nirprakash Giri, Kunjan Kafle, Mahis Maharjan, Bikram Shrestha and Ujwal Thapa.

The arrest of the campaigners is a blatant violation of their freedom of expression and of peaceful protest, which is guaranteed by the law. Although the arrested ones were released after some hours, such suppression is against the human rights.

April 9 was the 103rd day of the peaceful protest of the rights campaigners. The Occupy Baluwatar campaign was launched by the rights defenders against the backdrop of the rising number of violence against women (VAW) to mount pressure on the concerned authority to cater justice to victims of VAW, and punish the perpetrators rigorously.

Judicial Council Denies Information

Chairman of the Judicial Council denied information regarding the Council’s decision on appointment of appellate and district judges.

Advocate Binod Karki had sought the information about the marks he and others obtained in the examination for the judges. But Council Chairman Damodar Prasad Sharma who is also the Acting Chief Justice said that it was not mandatory to give the information. “There is no provision in the Interim Constitution of giving marks to the candidates during the interview,” he added.

Mr. Karki was one of the contenders but was not selected.

The Acting Chief Justice’s views violated the RTI Act, as it is against Section 3 of the Act which mentions—(1) Every citizen shall, subject to this Act have the right to information. (2) Every citizen shall have access to the information held in the public bodies.

Similarly, the Interim Constitution of Nepal 2007 in its Article 27 states—every citizen shall have the right to demand or receive information on any matter of his or her interest or of public interest.

Freedom Forum battled for advocate Karki’s right to get information.

Meanwhile, news reports had come that Judicial Council’s decision on the judge appointment was politically influenced; and of late the some newly appointed judges have shown affiliation to the political party thereby reasoning the political influence.

It has also questioned the sanctity of the decision. It shows the lack of transparency in legal sector which is harmful to democratic culture.

Immigrant’s FOE rights violated

Nepali Ambassador to Qatar, Maya Kumari Sharma, wrote to the Qatar government to deport a Nepali citizen Dipendra Bhetwal to Nepal, with a ‘false accusation’ that he was writing against Nepal government.

According to the Kathmandu daily published from Kathmandu, Bhetwal had been writing in the Qatar edition of the daily about ignorance of Nepal’s Embassy in Qatar towards the problems of Nepali workers in Qatar.

The right to freedom of expression is frontier-less issue which everyone needs to respect. And, Sharma, as a Nepali citizen, needs to abide by Nepal’s laws which have fully guaranteed one to freedom of expression.

in the turbulent moment of political history in Nepal, has been continuously working for the free expression, media freedom to enhance informed citizenry, good governance and transparency for the sake of improved democratic culture.

The IFEX says, “It’s network reflects that diversity. Our newest members span the globe, representing countries in Central Asia, Central and Southern Europe, the Middle East, Africa, and North and South America. Some focus their efforts on defending media freedom, while others address broader free expression issues including academic and artistic freedom. The new members have all expressed their keen commitment to engage with, learn from and contribute to the network, and we look forward to working with them as we all, individually and collectively, continue to take on the many challenges to our shared, fundamental right to free expression.”

It is worth noting that FF had been the IFEX members last year.

The IFEX general meeting and strategy conference is held every two years and is the largest global gathering of free expression advocates.

The meeting and conference was co-hosted by IFEX member-Canadian Center for Human Rights. The General Meeting brought together over 200 individuals, representing 96 free expression organizations from 67 different countries. During the Meeting, there were plenty of variety in types of sessions and a wealth of opportunities for one-on-one meetings and networking.

The IFEX said, “Our awareness of the challenges the people of Cambodia and other Southeast Asian countries are facing, and our respect for the courage and tenacity with which they are meeting these challenges, has grown even stronger.”

The opening session featured stories from free expression activists and experts from Burma, Cambodia, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines and Thailand.

Open Nepal...

were mulled during the hackathon. There was ideation on the applications relating to Nepali context as election, budget, school finder, foreign aid and others.

Similarly, on June 3-4, a data literary bootcamp was organized. The bootcamp was focused on distillation of data, its analysis, extraction and sifting. On the occasion, World Bank trainer Craig Hammer said how information could be made accessible to every people was the goal of the bootcamp. Making data/information consumable was important need, he added.

Similarly, the government officials made presentations on the efforts being made to make the transparency of aid-related data, they argued, would point the effectiveness of government and development assistance.

The week began on June 2 with Media Gatekeepers Roundtable event where representatives from many of Nepal’s major media houses were present for presentations and discussion on open data and data journalism which was facilitated by the World Bank Institute and the Open Aid Partnership. The event brought together an audience of senior level media stakeholders – owners, senior editors, leaders of media-related CSOs. On the occasion, Taranath Dahal, Chairperson of Freedom Forum spoke on how the media could use open data to strengthen its role as watchdog. Craig Hammer, Program Leader, Global Media Development at the World Bank Institute spoke of global trends in open data and data journalism, and made the case for the media to play a leading role in accessing, interpreting and communicating data to a popular audience.

The result is self-censorship and exile. “Mexico is places where journalists are slain and their killers go all rank on CPJ’s Impunity Index, which spotlights them with security and protection. The three countries they could not rely on local authorities to provide told CPJ that they made the decision to leave because widening field of politically motivated antagonists. raised concern that reporters are being targeted by a forces largely ousted Al-Shabaab militants from the that period. In 2012, a record 12 journalists were 10 deadliest countries for journalists every year in CPJ research. Somalia has also ranked in the top deadliest countries in the world for the profession. Others fled the threat of prison, especially in Iran, where the government deepened its crackdown ahead of elections. Fifty-five journalists fled their homes in the past year with help from the Committee to Protect Journalists. The most common reason to go into exile was the threat of violence, such as in Somalia and Syria, two of the most deadly countries in the world for the profession. Others fled the threat of prison, especially in Iran, where the government deepened its crackdown ahead of elections. becoming a silent tomb where journalists are mute and authorities are deaf,” Basurto said.

The second most common reason journalists gave for fleeing their homes is the threat of imprisonment. Iran is the second worst jailer of journalists worldwide, according to CPJ data. Since Tehran cracked down on journalists following the contested 2009 presidential elections, using a policy of arrests, appalling prison conditions, furloughs, and re-arrests, CPJ has documented a series of journalists fleeing to neighboring countries. The nine journalists who CPJ assisted in exile in the past 12 months is double the number we helped the previous year, reflecting the government’s increased effort to stifle the media ahead of the presidential elections earlier this month.

Many journalists fearing imprisonment also fled Eritrea and Ethiopia—Africa’s top jailers of journalists in 2012. Of the 30 journalists who CPJ assisted in exile from Eritrea since 2008, most spent time in the country’s infamous prisons before escaping the country. One print reporter, who asked not to be identified for his safety, fled Eritrea for Sudan in August 2008 after nearly six years in a government detention center. He was arrested in 2002 and was never officially charged with a crime, though he said he was repeatedly interrogated, forced into labor, and tortured with restraints and suspension of his body for extended periods of time. Prior to his arrest, he had worked in the official media, and had also been a contributor to one of a handful of independent newspapers in the country. Eritrean authorities shut down all independent media outlets in a widespread government crackdown on dissent beginning in September 2001. Many journalists have languished in prison since, without charge or trial.

Journalists in the East Africa nations of Somalia, Eritrea, Ethiopia, and Rwanda fled in high numbers over the past 12 months, as they have in prior years. Since May 31, 2012, CPJ supported 18 exiles from East Africa, making the East Africa region responsible for the highest number of exiled journalists for the sixth consecutive year—as long as CPJ has been collecting this data. The majority have relocated to the capitals of Kenya and Uganda, where they live under very difficult conditions.

Somalis living in Nairobi told CPJ they face continuous threats from multiple actors. Several said they have been physically abused, extorted, or illegally detained by Kenyan security forces, who discriminate against refugees in the capital city. In December 2012, the Kenyan Department of Refugee Affairs issued a statement blaming Somali refugees for contributing to Kenya’s insecurity problems, and ordering all in Nairobi to relocate to refugee camps, where journalists have told CPJ there is acute violence.

Iranian journalists in exile have similar concerns. Of those who fled Iran in the past couple of years, at least three are living in Malaysia, where there is a growing population of exiled Iranians because visas are relatively easy to obtain at entry points. Iranians in Malaysia told CPJ that they live in fear due to threats of violence and legal action from individuals who they believe work for the Iranian government.

Other Iranians fled to Turkey, where entry visas are not required but where there is no government support or protection. Turkey does not offer permanent asylum to non-Europeans; Iranian refugees are not allowed to settle there permanently or to work.
